NASA was interviewing professionals to be sent to Mars.

Only one could go, and it would be a one-way journey.

There were three applicants.

First up was a naturalist. Asked how much he wanted to be paid for going, he said: "A million dollars. I want to donate it to the World Wildlife Fund."

The next applicant, a doctor, when asked the same question, replied: "Two million dollars. I want to leave a million to my family and give the other million for the advancement of medical research."

The last applicant was a lawyer. When asked how much he wanted for going to Mars, he whispered in the interviewer's ear: "Three million dollars."

"Why so much more than the others?" asked the surprised interviewer.

The lawyer replied: "If you give me three million dollars, I'll give you one million, I'll keep one million, and we can send the naturalist to Mars!"
