During the period of Tokyo 2020 Olympics and Paralympics, I met many athletes near around the National Stadium. When I met and talked with the Kenyan representatives of track and field, I praised for their sprints. Then, one of them said there were much faster runners back in Kenia, so I asked him why they didn't participate the Games. He answered that Kenyan Olympic Committee could not catch them because they were too fast. So, IOC went to Kenya to investigate that and if there were really any faster runner there, they'd take them to Tokyo. At Kenya, one of the IOC members found the awfully fast runner running through the savanna in his binocular and he traced it by Jeep. And at last, he found a cheetah running on the horizon. After I heard this story, I realized that the Kenyan guy was the real cheater.
